

You know, when you first start your career and it's and especially my job, there is no consistency in my job. You don't know when your next check is coming. You don't know. You know, you got to kind of, think about the practical side of that. So you run all the time, you hustling. And then I think, you know, you kind of reach a point. Where you have a little bit of credibility. So you can stand and take some time. And that's where I've reached now, where I have a work life balance, which is very important to me. 7:00, 7:30, 7:00 I'm done from work. I like to have a couple of hours with my family. I like to wake up early with my baby, I like to be with my dogs.